Charter Day, 1966, marks the beginning of the University of California's ninety-ninth year of service to society. At the beginning, the University's role was a relatively limited one; it was a small undergraduate institution, and, because of its geographical isolation, it tended to be provincial in outlook. The years since that time have seen a steady expansion of the University's role to one of truly international scope, so that it now helps to make possible more contact and greater understanding between peoples and between nations.

One of the most significant aspects of this role is the international exchange of students. Each year, large numbers of students from countries abroad enroll in universities in the United States, and increasingly students from this country are going abroad for part of their academic work. The University of California is privileged to welcome more students from abroad than any other American university, and, in the other direction, we now send a number of our students each year to "Education Abroad Centers" in France, Germany, Italy, Spain, the United Kingdom, Japan, Hong Kong, Colombia, Greece, and Sweden.

The University is committed to a deep responsibility—which we share with other educational institutions, with churches, with families, with some aspects of government itself—to help equip students with training, knowledge, and understanding, so that they can work effectively and care wisely for the future of society. Only thus can the University offer opportunities for each generation of students—from this and many other countries—to learn anew of universal values, and to develop their critical faculties in the broad perspective of accumulated knowledge. Only thus can the University help to create the invisible bonds that link not only generations, but men of all times and all places.

Clark Kerr
President of the University

THE UNIVERSITY HYMN

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home!

Before the hills in order stood,
Or earth received her frame,
From everlasting Thou art God
To endless years the same.

Citation

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE PHILIP DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G., K.T.

Consort to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II of England, he symbolizes by position, word and deed the stability of the British crown and the enduring traditions which this great nation has established throughout the world. Educated in Germany and Scotland, he was a Naval officer during World War II and later commanded his own ship, HMS Magpie. Sportsman and explorer, he was awarded the National Geographic Society's Gold Medal by President Eisenhower in 1958 and cited for his "questing spirit." He is also deeply and actively interested in science, education and the character development of youth. Through his sponsorship, the Duke of Edinburgh's Award has helped to mould the ideals and fitness of thousands of boys and girls in Great Britain and throughout the Commonwealth. We salute him today and welcome him to honorary membership in the University of California.
